TWO FACED CERAMICS

Two Faced Ceramics is a small batch ceramics company by artist and designer Eve Palguta Thomas, based in Los Angeles, California. Her design objects explore asymmetry and irregularity against repetition and balance, creating unique harmony in objects, collections, and homes.

THE STORY

The name Two Faced Ceramics reflects the notion of people or objects presenting themselves in multiple ways. In order to create different moods, evoke different emotions, and inspire different ideas, Eve developed a slip-casting system to produce batches of each sculptural form, creating ‘personalities’ for each piece with various glaze finishes.

“I love being able to embrace different aesthetics and moods—a trait that carries over from my personal eclectic style—so I wanted to make sure I developed a studio practice that allowed my art form the same freedom of expression. ”

FORM + FINISH

Eve's functional artwork is full of soft curves and voluptuous silhouettes. Her amorphous forms draw inspiration from an array of sources such as the human body, insects, and natural formations.

Each form can be selected in a variety of glaze finishes, ranging from velvet matte finishes to mirror metallics to textured sandstones.

THE STUDIO

Two Faced Ceramics is committed to well-crafted, green-conscious, handmade goods. Eve's small-batch production ensures high quality functional art that isn't contributing to the waste of mass produced home goods. All products are hand made by the artist.

All clay scraps are recycled by hand by Eve, and all waste is given new life as fresh clay in the studio. The process of material reuse is a meditative act of rebirth in the work-flow of the studio cycle. Each vessel that comes from this clay has the story of a hundred other vessels woven into its material history.
